The Seductress

Lampropoulou Athanasia

Alas, break the mould and seduce me
Your body comes to tempt me
Oh please let me be!
What would the message of beauty would be
Without your emergence from the sea?
Nymphs approach to veil the mystery
Still, you pervade my mind and take away my misery.
Where innocence could lie
Apart from the roses that overwhelm your sight?
Gods of wind bring you in front of me
Is it an illusion or a real being?
You are the essence of my life
My breath, my heart, my thought, my wife
One moment away from you
And I become a shell of dud.

Bionote:

Lampropoulou Athanasia is an English teacher in private sector and an assistant pharmacist by profession. She also works as an English trainer in vocational schools. She is an active member of the startup Liofyllo. She has a BA in English Literature and Culture as she graduated from the National & Kapodistrian University of Athens in 2011 and holds an MA in Literature, Culture and Ideology.
