Which Is Worthwhile?

G.H. Abeyweera

Department of Management Sciences
Faculty of Management,
Uva Wellassa University of Sri Lanka
Sri Lanka.

You say that you stand by the principle,
but you become blind in principle when the need arises;
You say that you help the needy,
but you turn aside when you see the needy;
You say that you are transparent in your job,
but you become partial when the practice matters;
You say that you are harmless in your job,
but you go behind the superior to inflict the others with twisted tales;
You say that you are educated,
but you play fool when problems encounters;
You say that you are just,
but you turn into insinuation when caring matters;
You think that you stay well,
but I know you do not;
You think you sleep well,
but I know you do not;
You think you are healthy,
but I know you are sickly;
You think you are successful, but I know you are not;
You think you would succeed further, but I know that you will not;

Not as an educated, but not even as a poor layman.

Yet, it says that;

If you are open in openness, transparent in transparency

If you are honest in honesty, truthful in truism in life,

You can say that you are successful and will succeed further in life.

Either to be open, transparent, honest, and truthful,

or just to be a pretentious;

Which is worthwhile?
