with twenty and nine candles here i am burying them sometimes burning too both with a practiced quietness this art is not learnt but 'tis a taste acquired and a habit born on empty dinner tables with unworn rings - unclaimed lips beds unshared and peerless nights now no more them i see opened or closed eyes yet flashes of fancy emerge rise and sink staying momentarily but the seeds of this art sown slow and sudden at ten and eight just before adding 'nother to the tally of years this bilious activity grew gradually 'twas nurtured making them gangrenous too seeming slightly simple to you maybe 'tis too sans dancing and chanting 'round their remains with a wooden stake through for even cold and buried or burnt and bloody they became someone new with these talents and hands sanguinary glistening eyes
i am ready with a cleaver and such arts should you begin to seem enticing too
