Loot the Heart

Erik Korhel

Melancholy is too far away. Call me.
Ed drew me near. The porch light is on. Leave it.
Search bar: Oblivion. On my own. Autumn removes, then replaces. Ache. Is it a red face? Just the mustache. Tell me what you were up to then? Use baby teeth. Ethereal voice. There is a disturbance. Witching hour. I owe my parents. The definition of 'strange'.
Returning isn't the option, but the cure.
(Curse). Pay to the order of. Burn the house down.
Happy Garden. Grilled cheese. Roy Rogers. On me.

Bio:

Erik Korhel began pursuing his dream writing poetry with his first release, a children's book of poems titled "My Tooth Fell in My Soup". This book is well received by the educational community, having achieved a Must Have Books and Resources listing with the "New York City Department of Education". With positive responses to the first, in 2011 his second published anthology of children's poems titled "The Kid with the Red Juice Mustache" was released. October 2013 saw his third poetry book for children, "They Say I Am Obnoxious".
