Spread the Mat for a Returning General

Ndubuisi Martins

Let the mat spread through this path as we hail the general who returns, four times denied, now emerges with the heads of his four enemies under his armpits, for the Aso-isle carnival scrub, the flavor of a repeated song still on civil lips.

Let the martial music begin for a return, a second coming to re-christen the garrison commander whose barrack tone cracked overnight to become half- tranquil, hesitant stream where colourful metaphors trap many ears and cucumber coldness is a hint of a murmuring army, waiting to leave its stench yet again.

We now step into the new baptism of CHANGE, Strolled through the NEXT LEVEL another maxim perennially renewed to woo all long-benumbed ones, we whose sense of history is the very life of amnesia, we, who leave wound to fester flies until our neighbours cope with the frequent fragrance That defines our homeland.

We snore and snort for we are here at this Rome where our rearguard Vicar is now a repentant democrat, ready to enthrone silence and give swords to the air, promulgate decrees and claim the see of spirit, ready to cure the darkness on the land with the grief of Egypt.

Fourteen gunshots for the general who belongs to nobody and for everybody, who must answer the surname of herds valours of his 97% votes and kinsmen of the RUGA dream.
